OpIndia article alleging terror ties among groups opposing RSS chief's US visit rated disinformation

An OpIndia article republished on DailyHunt asserts that five organisations opposing RSS chief Mohan Bhagwat's North American tour have ties to "Islamists and Khalistanis," including designated terrorist groups. The Lab's review found the terror-linkage claims unsupported in open sources and the framing built on advocacy rhetoric rather than verifiable fact.

NARRATIVES
Claiming Pakistan Controls Sikh Political Activism

OUR ASSESSMENT

The article correctly identifies the main opposing voices and the fact of coordinated pressure around the visit. Its core narrative, that these actors form an overlapping ecosystem critical of RSS/Hindutva, often drawing on the same USCIRF reports and minority-rights framing is supported by their public collaborations and statements. Claims of direct operational ties to designated terrorist groups (LeT, SIMI, etc.) for IAMC or equivalent for others are serious, repeatedly made by Indian government-aligned and some Western analysts (MEF, HAF, etc.), but strongly denied by the groups and not resulting in formal US terrorist designations or successful prosecutions visible in open sources. Language such as “sinister credentials,” “Islamo-leftist cabal,” “pathological animosity,” and “manufactured outrage” is advocacy rhetoric, not neutral fact-checking.

THE ANALYSIS

What was published

On 21 August 2026, an English-language article headlined "From USCIRF to IAMC: Read about 5 anti-India outfits, with ties to Islamists and Khalistanis, which are opposing the visit of RSS chief Mohan Bhagwat to the US" was published by OpIndia and republished on the DailyHunt aggregation platform.

The item is framed around a three-nation tour of the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom by Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS) chief Mohan Bhagwat. It profiles five organisations it describes as "anti-India outfits" opposing the visit, among them the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) and the Indian American Muslim Council (IAMC).

The article asserts links between the groups it profiles and "Islamists and Khalistanis," invoking, among other references, "Khalistani terrorists such as Talwinder Singh Parmar and Hardeep Singh Nijjar in association with the infamous Sikhs for Justice."

The Lab's verdict

Disinformation. Factually false on its central allegations. Severity 4 of 5.

The review does not dispute every element of the article. Its identification of the principal voices publicly opposing the visit, and its description of coordinated advocacy pressure around the tour, is accurate. So too is the broader observation that these actors constitute an overlapping advocacy network critical of the RSS and of Hindutva politics, frequently drawing on the same USCIRF reporting and the same minority-rights framing. That much is evidenced by the organisations' own public collaborations and statements.

The article's failure lies in what it builds on top of that accurate base.

The terror-linkage claims are not supported

The article's defining allegation — that the organisations it names have operational ties to designated terrorist entities, including groups such as Lashkar-e-Taiba and the Students Islamic Movement of India in the case of the IAMC, and equivalent linkages in the case of the other bodies profiled — is a grave one.

Such claims are not novel. They have been advanced repeatedly by Indian government-aligned commentators and by some Western analysts and organisations, including the Middle East Forum and the Hindu American Foundation. They are also strongly denied by the organisations concerned.

The Lab's review found no corroboration for the allegations in the open-source record. No formal terrorist designation has been applied by the United States to any of the organisations named, and no successful prosecution establishing the alleged linkages is visible in open sources. Allegations that have circulated for years in advocacy publications without producing either a designation or a conviction cannot be presented to readers as established fact, which is what the article does from its headline onward.

The inclusion of Talwinder Singh Parmar and Hardeep Singh Nijjar functions in the same way: as guilt-by-association framing attached to organisations the article is criticising, rather than as documented evidence of a relationship between those organisations and the advocacy bodies it profiles.

Advocacy rhetoric presented as analysis

The article's register is a further indicator. Phrases including "sinister credentials," "Islamo-leftist cabal," "pathological animosity" and "manufactured outrage" are the vocabulary of political advocacy. They are not neutral descriptive language, and they are not the language of factual reporting or verification.

The effect is to convert legitimate, documented political disagreement — advocacy organisations and a US federal commission publicly criticising an Indian political movement and its leader — into an implied security threat. Readers are offered no means of distinguishing the portion of the article that is verifiable from the portion that is contested allegation.

Context

The item sits within a recurring narrative pattern tracked by the Lab (the Claiming Pakistan Controls Sikh Political Activism narrative) in which Sikh, Muslim and other minority-rights advocacy in North America is characterised as an extremist or terrorism-linked network rather than as protected political speech. The pattern's practical consequence is to attach a terrorism frame to Canadian and American advocates and organisations engaged in lawful public criticism.

The amplification route is also relevant. The article originated with OpIndia and reached a substantially wider audience through republication on DailyHunt, a high-traffic aggregation platform. Aggregator republication carries the original framing intact, including the headline's unqualified assertion of terror ties, to readers who may not distinguish between an aggregator and an original news source.

The Lab assessed the item at severity 4 on account of the seriousness of the unsupported allegations, the named targets, and the scale of distribution.

About Sikh Disinformation Lab

Sikh Disinformation Lab is an independent, evidence-based programme founded and hosted by the World Sikh Organization of Canada. It monitors, analyses and publicly documents disinformation affecting Sikhs.

The Lab examines claims against evidence, publishes assessments with that evidence attached, and tracks coordinated campaigns over time. Every published assessment names what was claimed, where it appeared, what the review found, and what that assessment rests on. Where an item makes several distinct claims, each is assessed separately.

Assessments are made against the methodology framework in force at the time of publication. That framework is public, versioned, and reviewed at each phase gate; a material change produces a new version rather than a silent edit. The full method is published at sikhdisinfolab.ca/method.

Corrections are dated entries, never silent edits. Where a published assessment is found to be wrong or incomplete, the correction is recorded against it and listed at sikhdisinfolab.ca/corrections. If you believe something published here is inaccurate, write to the programme and it will be reviewed.

Assessments are the responsibility of Sikh Disinformation Lab.

This project has been made possible with support from the Government of Canada.
